As we are striving for our FIFTH Green Flag, and the theme is Bio-Diversity, we have decided to develop our school garden. Our Green School Committee has decided to develop our garden as a welcoming, open space, for both pupils and bugs alike! We have started weeding the garden and even planted a few new plants and trees, not bad for one day of hard work! We soon hope to have areas of busy birch trees, birds, bees and bustlin' bio-diversity!

The day started as usual. We wrote down our homework, we read a little bit of our class novel Bridge to Terabithia, and we heard the plan for the day. Then the lady, Deirdre was her name, came in. She explained what we were going to do; plant trees (that attract loads of different species of insects and bugs), dig soil and basically work on our garden.

The first group was from the first table and Joanna went out while the rest of us did English and Irish. At ten minutes to eleven we got our small break and had a chat. When we came in teacher took the rest of table two and nearly all of table three while the rest of us stayed in for Maths and Religion. At lunchtime we had another break and went outside. Then when we came back, i, finally our table, table four and table five went out. The rest did P.E. AND S.P.H.E.

The gardening was awesome! We planted trees, picked up worms (yes, we did have gloves!) and dug the soil. We learned alot about birch trees and Séan found a mutant ant with a stinger! And that was day one of bio-diversity!!
